Cat Leaps 50 Feet From Telephone Cross Arm and Alights Unhurt.

That cats bear charmed lives-nine to each pussy-has long been contended by students of the feline race. Now comes the Boston Transcript with a tale of a large Angora in Watertown that was discovered marooned on the cross arm of a 50-foot telephone pole. All attempts to coax the cat down or If so, it will interest you to to reach it by means of ladders failed, know that it can be stopped but it finally reached the ground by umping, and astonished the spectators by escaping unburt. The cat is a pet in the family of H. B. Hartford. It was playing in the saird when a passing dog sighted it and gave chase. The cat was cut off from the house and there was cut of from the house and there was no tree convenient, so it climbed the telephone pole. Some time later its cries were heard and steps were taken to release it. Coaxing failed, and at last a long ladder was procured. After climbing as high as the ladder permitted the wouldbe rescuer worked his way up kept retreating toward the end of the cross arm on which he was purched cross arm on which he was perched, and as the climber made a last des-perate grab the cat jumped. Striking the ground on all four feet, it shook itself and ran for the Hartford house.
